I'm an advocate of Adobe Photoshop. Because it's the best product for designers and graphic designers. Its interface was designed for a designer who is very competent and likes a lot of elements. I absolutely love Photoshop. It's the best all purpose photo editing program. Useful tools and helpful functions are available here. In this version, there is an excellent workflow (Workflow lets you send photos, copy/paste, merge photos and more). Editing the photos in the same device is probably the greatest feature in this version. It can be quite frustrating sometimes for beginners. If you are not familiar with editing photos, this program can be a bit of a nightmare to use for you. But, use it as you want, after all, this is what it is designed for. Intelligent Scan adjustment has been replaced by Shoot (a version of Smart Fix) applied when shot stitching. Shoot uses information from the camera at sub-pixel level to improve the color balance and the exposure, and correct lens distortion and chromatic aberrations. This is a really cool feature but be aware the camera has to support it. Additionally, you can connect a tripod to your computer and the program will perform geotagging. If you notice a gimbal rather than a tripod, you have a feature called Ground Control. This feature, using a smartphone app or a remote button, will move your image in missions of up to 40 frames. See more in the article at Adobe and in this blog post . So, how does the new version stack up against Capstone? The latter is more indepth, while for the average amateur photographer the pros should be the benchmark. In other words, I am not impressed. That being said, Lightroom is better integrated with the Bridge and its adaptive viewfinder, is faster and provides further options. The latter also includes filters not available in Capstone. But, as stressed before, Lightroom doesn't provide all the features. Those missing capabilities are provided by other software, including online – like this site owned by Joseph Grundy the author of the excellent "Best of Lens Photography" .

As you can see I've opened a new document using the default templates. If you select the Open a New Document dialog you can choose between Photoshop' default templates categories, Images, Web & Graphic Design, Video, and many others. These categories group object types from which you can choose. If you're a photographer, selecting Photo & Portable Document (JPEG) will bring you a large collection of photos from your camera. Instead of being forced to load individual photos you can select this category individually. A tag library can be toggled on by selecting Edit>Tags & Layers. If we select File>Save As a different name will appear already selected. If you're saving a web page, you'll be asked to choose the Save for Web option which is selected by default. I've blurred the background a bit using a High Pass Filter to reduce noise and RGB channels, and desaturated the colors a bit. The Watercolor filter looks great because we're introducing the slightly muddy color of the background. Next, using the Colorize tool, I've muted the background colors to make the text stand out. However, this only works for black and white text, since both colors on the pages are the same. To get around this, I've used the Hue/Saturation slider for Pre-Hue/Saturation. Making the text bolder increases its overall contrast and can make it easier for the observer to read. I also used the Colorize tool to increase contrast in the entire image and to make the vintage powder packaging stand out. Black and white photos are seldom washed out despite being out of focus. Let's now keep working on this image! e3d0a04c9c
